

A two-day course on
Value-Based Offering, Pricing and Sales
September 13-14, 2018

Purpose

Contribute to a significant improvement in your company's profitability by promoting unique value-based offerings, bolder value-based pricing and successful value-based sales.

Why?

Four critical issues that drive the need and urgency to participate in this course:

1. How much money do we lose due to outdated pricing principles?
2. How can we get out of the cost-plus price-per-unit way of thinking?
3. How can we get paid for the additional value we deliver?
4. How do we design the offerings, the revenue models and the pricing when we integrate forward and start to deliver services, often based on the installed base and with applications of embedded systems, sensors, M2M, IoT, Big Data, and the internet?

How?

Lectures in combination with breakout sessions; to anchor the message into the participants own realities

Two intensive days at a conference centre

All lectures, discussions and documentation will be in English.

Participants:
minimum 15 and maximum 30

From the content:

- Unique offerings and value propositions
- Developing prices – an unconventional take on how to change the price levels customers are willing to pay
- Identifying value: improve both margins and customer satisfaction
- Target customer profiles to improve hit-rates and reduce quotation/sales costs
- The business process and how to 'marry' product development and sales
- Marketing and communicating your value message, including quotations
- Negotiation and contracts – commercial best practises

For whom?

You who have a significant role in the development of products and services, design of offerings, pricing, sales, or in any other relevant interaction with the customers businesses. And you who represent purchasing in these customer businesses.

The main focus is on the needs of technology-based businesses in a B2B context.

Lecturer
